From Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy: At one point he suggests that other animals can also be said to have their own "culture and history" but since he doesn't say what he means by those words, it is hard to see that claim as anything more than an arbitrary terminological gesture.

The whole analysis is elaborate and a bit all over the place, but the basic point is true. Merleau-Ponty says nothing about what makes detached reflection and deliberate action possible. Thanks for telling us about the problem.

Warum erfinden Tiere keine Maschinen und warum fliegen sie nicht zum Mond? To an extent, the fact perhaps made worse in translation.
