Only the Jews in Babylonian remained outside of Roman rule. The fourth group represents what may be characterised as the sources of the Jewish communities of India themselves. Furthermore, recent decades witnessed mass adoption of Israelite identity. The populations of Sephardi and Mizrahi Jewish communities "showed no evidence for a narrow founder effect. After numerous vicissitudes, and especially owing to internal dissensions within the Seleucid dynasty on the one hand and to the interested support of the pre-Roman Empire, the pre-autocratic Roman Republic on the other, the cause of Jewish independence finally triumphed.
