Sorensen and Funck Routledge New York. The SDF was quicker to respond, and there was better communication with Tokyo about the damage, while units from outside the area were brought in. Aid – The Japanese rejected international offers of aid and dealt with the earthquake .

Community centre was erected at the edge of the park and provides a range of facilities. One of the more noticeable changes in rescue and relief policies is the quick acceptance by Japan of international assistance, and the better efforts for getting them on-site. International experience over many decades has clearly demonstrated that transformative renewal that creates opportunity out of disaster is achieved only when it is locally led. So there was a terrible situation in that it was almost four days before there was a build-up of emergency rescue people from outside.

Strategy for Holistic Recovery: Fewer people lost their lives, and there was a Machizukuri centre and related community groups are still as active as twenty years ago and many original activists still share their knowledge and experience with younger members. The changes were encapsulated in the District Planning system introduced in 1971 and the amendments to the Planning Act in 1980.
