The US researchers suggested that people who consume wine have health habits that could influence other health outcomes, and their behaviour might result in a lower incidence of cancer and all cause mortality. The existence of the French paradox has caused some researchers to speculate that the link between dietary consumption of saturated fats and coronary heart disease might not be as strong as had previously been imagined.

It would take too long to report on all the studies dealing with the relationship.

The existence of the French paradox has caused some researchers to speculate that the link between dietary consumption of saturated fats and coronary heart disease might not be as strong as had previously been imagined (French Edition). High doses of resveratrol have been linked to longevity and cancer prevention in other species. This has resulted in a review of the earlier studies which had suggested this link.
