Concrete sidewalks are split and buckled, stuccoed walls are crazed and stained, roads are gullied and pocked with holes big enough to swallow a small car, steps are crumbling, ragged-edged. No, with killing and bombings and trash dumped in the street and racial hatred, Kosovo doesn't sound like a great place to visit. May20, TerryTracz rated it really liked it. Despite lingering concerns that this quintessential American writer so notorious for his machismo might not resonate, the story of the old man's struggle to bring in his big fish touched them deeply. It was also a fear of the unknown. Why were they interested in learning English?

However, Paula's story is a personal journal where she reminisces, daily, on the opportunity to teach English as a second language to mostly young Albanians arises, she seizes it only to discover she is receiving as much of an education as the students she is hired to instruct.
