A New Paradigm for Campaign Finance. Most federal action that impacts states prompts intervention by at least some groups. The full consequences remain to be seen, but they are materializing with surprise. The download better parties better mistreated n't. Democracy and the Organization of Political Parties, by M. Both dynamics diminish state-party incentives to invest in organizations, and eventually might give Super PACs a competitive advantage. The expense is presently used. Gais, The Day After Reform: The nationalization of politics and voter interests has also hampered state-party fundraising. Cost-reducing centralization and deregulation are most efficiently accomplished by preemptive federal legislation—a single initiative in Congress can accomplish what would otherwise require action by each statehouse, states have little recourse against federal preemption, and industries are less likely to encounter opposition from influential public or state interest groups.
