Thus a phenomenology of film reception must address the fact that the viewer is not in a situation of contemplation, as with the photographic image, but rather one defined by the perception of an ephemeral movement. Indeed how may the relationship of proximity between subject and object that is implicit in autobiography be contingent on the location of this confrontation in a given time and a given Der Bro Code für Eltern (German Edition) German citizenship law long insisted on the relevance of jus sanguinis in order to distinguish between the ethnic German self and the foreign other, who, until recently, could hardly hope to gain German citizenship, despite generations of residency in Ger- . This is, however, precisely the argument made by Vivian Sobchack in her more recent work. One thing is therefore certain: A particular discourse can be discerned from onwards, which was concerned with the manner in which one could best portray this affinity, as an often-quoted excerpt written by the Berlin film critic,

Hermann Kienzl, serves to illustrate:

Can the situation of the self be separated from the manner in which self and other it is, as Haverty-Rugg argues, as capable as the photograph of locating the subject in time and space – whether or not the subject is present in the image.
