Bill is in such familiar territory that he unfurls his self-centred self in full, spending whole pages describing the organizational skills of his favorite hotel and insulting anonymous people who crossed him 20 years ago. Bryson praises the city of Durham in the book. I am predicting more architectural hand-wringing.

Oct25,TravelinratedititwasokShelves: Once there was infinite romance in the sea, and the Merseyside Maritime Museum captures every bit of it. I had never seen anything half so beautiful. View all 3 comments.
