With their vision in mind, the students go on to identify what might help to achieve their goal and what could hinder achievement. This may involve further collaboration with people in the school and the community and will provide opportunities for the students to develop or practise the skills of decision making and problem solving.

Yet it was somehow just really unsurprising and pedantic. The students need to identify what they have learned and analyse reasons for the results of the action they have taken especially if they seem to have made little or no progress towards their goal. But it is no substitute for his much more thorough "School Choice and Social Justice.
