This paper shows how the implementation of characterisation techniques at sub-micrometric scales allows to understand these mechanisms. Paris designers, led by Christian Dior made Paris once again the capital of high fashion. The siege was long and unsuccessful and, finally, Henry IV agreed to convert to Catholicism.

During the Reign of Terror, 16,000 persons were tried by the revolutionary tribunals.

In the summer of 1793 Paris became the centre stage of the French Revolution. Factors in the migration included de-industrialisation, high rent, the gentrification of many inner quarters, the transformation of living space into offices, and greater affluence among working families.
