Mintzberg calls for a more engaging approach to managing and a more reflective approach to management education. He describes how he and some colleagues developed just such a program. Eitherway, you will find the Professor articulate and well-researched. It is. Instead of teaching analysis to mostly inexperienced MBA students who have not yet managed Mintzberg advocates management is an art and craft that can not be directly taught, but that practicing managers can improve their skills and insights by taking an educational program it is decidedly not an MBA based on their situated experience. A previous book Artists, Craftsmen and Technocrats spoke to many of the changes evident at my firm. But people who already practice management can significantly improve their effectiveness given the opportunity to learn thoughtfully from their own experience.

The book was sent on time and fast, however, the book is in a very bad shape, the of 12 reviews. Ironically, although Professor Mintzberg is quite critical about the strategy consulting business, he has twice won the McKinsey Award for publishing the best article in the Harvard Business Review.
